ing his optonent to pieces, for as fast as he could withdraw the knife he would plunge it into the body of Mc-Cormick, and stabled him the third time throught the left forearm. Another stab drove the thin blade to the hit fust below the breast bone, and the fifth lunge drove the knife into the intestines of McCormick. The cutting was done so quickly that every stab was made before the butchered man fell to the floor.

Murderer Escapes From Room. The noise of the tight attracted the the noise of the ught attracted the attention of the guard, and Gray, throwing the knife down, made his escape from the room before the guard could get to the wounded man. The latter was found lying in a pool of blood, which was flowing from his wounds in streams. It gushed out as if from a fountain from the wound in the neck and to save the prisoner's neck, and to save the prisoner's life the gasrd had to hold the artery sible, but it was several hours before he could get the flow of blood stopped. The wound in the neck was thought to as the bleeding had been staunched the wounded man was removed to the penitentiary hospital. Although cut in a manner that the doctor stated would have killed most men immediately, McCormick retained his consciousness and talked of the affair. In answer to questions he declared that he had gotten tired of prison life and cut himself in an effort to take his own life. He refused to admit that Gray had done the cutting at all, and

He declared that the latter had bullied him and picked on him until he could stand it no longer, and when he received the blow in the laundry he became so infuriated that he didn't know what he was doing.

While it was evident at first that the wounds received by McCormick were very serious it was thought that the majority of them were only super-ficial, until Dr. Young made a closer examination in preparation to sew up the cuts. He found that patient was too weak from the loss of blood to have an operation performed to sew up the intestines. Everything was done that could be done by the physician to save the life of the wounded man, who, after lingering for a phenomenally long time for a man in the condition he was, died last night just before midnight.

As soon as the death occurred Warden Dow telephoned Dr. Young of the William Hatfield 1167 East Brigham, by the report that a burgiar was locked up in the cellar. The volice, with all speed, hastened to the scene. Entering the house, the first thing they found was a large hammer, weighing about four pounds, with which the back door had been smashed in.

Mrs. Hatfield, her two daughters, and little son were in a highly excited condition. A careful and thorough search of the cellar revealed nothing, when the officers proceeded upstairs. No sign of any burgiar could be found, but Mr. Hatfield's son was found abed in his room. In the meantime, it was ascertained that Mrs. Hatfield and her daughters had been in the house only a short time, having spent the day at Saltair, and were didsturbed by a loud crash in the rear of the house. They were too badly frightened to make any investigation, but telephoned immediately for the po-he girls declared the about the premises. An officer finally took the hammer upstairs and, showing it to the young man, asked him if he had ever seen it before. He laughed and said he had, and then acknowledged the whole affair, admitting that he had caused all the disturbance.
